

As a frequent business traveller (100,000 miles or more a year), I lend my voice to others who would find the use of cell phones aboard flights of any length a major aggravation to both travel and mental health. We know from everyday experience that people on cell phones tend to completely disregard those around them, both in terms of noise level, appropriate conversations in public, and necessity.

I strongly urge the FCC to continue the general ban on cell phone use aboard flights.
